

Research project on female leavers from the solicitor profession

Call for Participants

Are you a female solicitor who has left private practice or the solicitor
profession entirely?
If so, we would like to hear from you...

The Law Society of Northern Ireland is conducting a research study into female experiences of working in the solicitor profession in Northern Ireland.

Recent research has highlighted a significant mid-career migration of practising female solicitors from roles in private law firms to the public sector and other legal roles, and out of the profession entirely. The Law Society would like to gather evidence and explore reasons for these trends to improve the experiences of females within the solicitor profession.

We would therefore particularly like to hear the views of females who have left private practice and moved to in-house/public/third sector roles or who have left the profession entirely.

We are holding a series of workshops across Northern Ireland:

Location: Newry

Venue: Canal Court

Date: 20 March 2023

Time: 10am-12pm

Location: Omagh

Venue: Silverbirch Hotel

Date: 27 March 2023

Time: 10am-12pm

Location: Derry/Londonderry

Venue: City Hotel

Date: 17 April 2023

Time: 1pm-3pm

Location: Belfast

Venue: Law Society House

Date: 24 April 2023

Time: 10am-12pm

Findings of the research will be presented in a published report. All information collected during the research will be kept strictly confidential. All responses will be anonymised, and you will not be named in the study.

To find out more or if you would like to participate in any of the workshops, please contact:
nuala.mcmahon@lawsoc-ni.org

THE LAW SOCIETY OF NORTHERN IRELAND

100
YEARS