Until recent times, the establishment of a global legal law practice was deemed to be the sole preserve of the multinational legal firms with hundreds of partners and support staff operating out of prestigious offices situated in prime buildings in the world's financial centres. However, it is possible to emulate the principles, if not the scale, of gradually expanding a small firm or individual practice in to different jurisdictions in order to service the requirements of new or existing clients. This seminar will feature Paul Tweed and Paul Wright, two lawyers who have achieved this in the UK and US respectively.

Paul Tweed, senior partner at Johnsons Solicitors, heads up the Media and Dispute Resolution departments. He practices in the UK and is also registered as a Foreign Legal Consultant by the California State Bar. He has been involved in many high profile defamation actions in the UK and Ireland during the past 25 years, with clients including numerous A-List Hollywood celebrities and renowned international personalities in music, film, sports and entertainment.

Paul J. Wright is a California attorney with an international transactional and litigation law practice in Malibu, California. He is President of the British American Business Council, Los Angeles, and a Board Member and General Counsel of both BritWeek and the Variety Foundation, the non profit arm of Variety, the most important entertainment publication in the United States.
